WEEKLY USA GRAIN AND PROTEIN REPORT January 06, 2024

It was a down week for prices for everything this week. Soybeans were down by about USD 15 m/t with soymeal down by USD 17 m/t. US corn prices dipped by about USD 5 m/t while all US wheat was down by USD 5 or 6 m/t.

Soybean prices were said to be down due to the good weather in Argentina and Brazil and the expectation of better and better and better soybean crops.

Corn was lower on disappointing export sales as this week was 70% lower in export sales than last week and much below expectations. Of course, buying based on one week's lower exports makes no sense as overall corn export shipments are still up on the year. While wheat prices were down overall in the week, they were up a little on Friday as buyers jumped in to take advantage of low prices. US wheat exports are still below last year's level.

Next week's WASDE report is being looked at with great anticipation because historically the January report usually has a few surprises.

Estimated Bulk Grain Freight in USD per m/t, basis heavy grains.

The Red Sea situation and the resulting reassignment of container vessels has pushed container freight rates much higher this week.

Not much to say on prices for corn coproducts this week as markets seem to be very quiet.

Buyers of DDGS and corn gluten meal in containers are in for a surprise as container freight rates are moving higher very quickly. The Red Sea situation and the realignment of vessels sailings and positions has made fixing container shipments very difficult and very expensive. It is going to take a few weeks to sort out what is happening with container freight and how all destinations and origins can be fully serviced.

Vessels passing through the Suez Canal – both northbound and southbound – are reported to be down by 28%. This is making container shipments westbound from Asia and eastbound from North America and Europe very complicated, much longer and more expensive. You don't realize how many shipments can be affected by Red Sea problems until it happens.

SECTION 2 --- FISHMEAL COMMENTS AND PRICES: PERUVIAN "INDICATION" FISHMEAL PRICES:

So far in January the catch has been at 33,000 m/t increasing the total catch to 1,18 million m/t with 503,000 m/t remaining on the quota to the end of January.

Still not much reported in new fishmeal business in Peru and prices are steady. Sales to date stand at about 225,000 m/t.

There was a comment in the trade that the current shortage of Super Prime and Prime fishmeal has caused buyers to try to book positions in the next fishing season.

Also, comments in the trade that the fishing season may be cut short by the government due to the very high juvenile levels. And the weather for fishing is very bad these days, as is normal for January.

European fishmeal prices – FOB North German port.
