WEEKLY USA GRAIN AND PROTEIN REPORT – August 16, 2025

Corn prices had quite an up and down week after the WASDE but did finish the week almost unchanged. However, soybeans had a very strong week with prices up by about USD 20 m/t at the end of the week --- soymeal also moved higher by about USD 10 m/t. US winter wheat was about USD 3 m/t lower at the end of the week with US spring wheat also down by about USD 3 m/t.

Corn prices had been lower during the week due to very large stocks seen in the WASDE report but concerns over the hot weather in the corn belt and increased corn use for ethanol production helped to push corn up from the week's lows to unchanged.

Soybeans rallied all week on the WASDE results which showed soybean acreage at the lowest level for 6 years ---- add to this a good level of exports and soybeans moved higher. Press reports say that the switch in acreage levels between soybeans and corn was the biggest change seen since 1995.

Trade reports say that there was no reason for any price changes in wheat....the wheat market seemed quiet for the week. Wheat futures prices were back down at contract low again for part of the week.

Estimated Bulk Grain Freight in USD per m/t, basis heavy grains.

SECTION 2 --- FISHMEAL COMMENTS AND PRICES: PERUVIAN "INDICATION" FISHMEAL PRICES:

News reports say that the next IMARPE research cruise for the next fishing season will begin about September 10 and last for just over one month which could mean that the new fishing season may begin before the end of October --- or not.

Fishmeal export sales now booked for the current season are estimated to be up to 565,000 m/t which would imply that there is nothing left to sell except the odd small lot or some supplies that can come available from the fishing in the south of Peru ---- so far the south region has only produced a little over 7,000 m/t of fishmeal since its season began on July 01.

The asking price for fishmeal has taken a good jump higher which may keep Chinese buyers out of the market for a while. Of course, we are looking at the next fishing season being about 3 months in the future, so there is probably no need to rush and try to buy.

According to all the scientific reports there doesn't seem to be much worry about any El Nino event in the next few months ---- this should keep the anchovies happy (and the fishmeal industry too).
